Course Descriptions

This course strengthens students' abilities in academic reading, writing, and critical thinking. Students develop skills in summarizing and paraphrasing texts and compose short essays (500-750 words) that have a cogent thesis supported by both textual and personal evidence in coherent paragraphs with clear topic sentences. This course also reinforces basic skills such as the correct use of punctuation, spelling, and sentence structure. Vocabulary development and appropriate usage are emphasized.

English 101: College Reading and Composition I (3)

This is a college-level freshman composition course which focuses on expository writing and argumentation and requires the writing of a minimum of 6000 words in essays and a research paper. Students study a variety of texts written at the college level, including literature, that reflect current academic concerns relating to issues of language, ethnicity, class, gender, identity, psychology, and cultural studies.

Administration of Justice 1: Introduction to Administration of Justice (3)

This course presents an introduction to the administration of justice in the United States, its history, philosophy, sub-systems, roles of its members and their relationships. It also introduces theories of crime, punishment, and rehabilitation and looks at ethics, education, professionalism, and training in the system.

Chicano Studies 44: Mexican Civilization (3)

This course considers the significant elements of pre-Columbian Mexican Civilization, the impact of the Spanish domination upon the indigenous population and its influence upon the mores, art, and industry. Studies in the history, literature, art, and music of Mexico as they evolved from Colonial times to the present are included. The course also examines the present-day culture of the Mexican-American as influenced by cultural Mexican heritage and life in the United States.

Sociology 1: Introduction to Sociology (3)

This course is a general introduction to the subject matter, basic concepts and techniques of sociology as a social science. Patterns and origins of social behavior in a diverse society are analyzed.

Political Science 1: The Govt. in the U.S. (3)

This course is an introduction to government and politics in the United States. Students study the theoretical foundations of American political institutions, the U.S. Constitution, the Constitution of California and Federal System including relations between state and federal governments.

English 28: Intermediate Reading & Composition (3)

In this course, students plan, draft, revise, and edit compositions of increasing sophistication and complexity, progressing from multi-paragraph 750-word essays to essays of 1000 words that reference classroom texts as well as personal experience in support of a clearly delineated thesis statement. Writing is based on readings which cover topics that challenge the students' thinking and provide an intellectual background for the assignments. Readings, discussion, and writing assignments may focus on fiction, non-fiction, memoirs, and/or poetry.

English 103: Composition and Critical Thinking (3)

This course develops critical thinking, reading, and argumentative writing skills beyond the level achieved in English 101 and requires the writing of a minimum of 10,000 words in essays and a research paper throughout the semester. It emphasizes reasoning, analysis and strategies of argumentation using interdisciplinary texts that include theoretical and literary works. Evaluations of texts reveal the multicultural/global aspects of our society.

Chicano Studies 2: The Mexican-American in Contemporary Society (3)

The course introduces the student to the major characteristics of the largest growing ethnic group in the United States. Special attention is given to the social, cultural, economic, and political elements which differentiate Mexican-Americans in relationship to other groups in American society.

Asian-American Studies 1: The Asian American in the History of the United States (3)

This course examines the historical backgrounds and political, economic, and social issues affecting Asians in America. The representative groups and communities include Chinese, Japanese, East Indians, Filipino, Korean, Laotian, Cambodians, and Vietnamese.

Theater 100: Introduction to the Theater (3)

A survey study and analysis of the various elements that make up the institution called the Theatre. Subjects range from origins of primitive drama to contemporary structure and direction of our modern Theatre.

Sociology 2: American Social Problems (3)

This course examines some of the major contemporary problems of American society, such as human relations, poverty, crime, drugs, and global issues that affect American society. Social problems are analyzed in terms of their relation to the values and institutions of American society. The role of power in the definition of social problems is considered as are the causes and consequences of social problems. Students evaluate proposed solutions and interventions used to address American social problems.
